ABSTRACT

Dovetail Cultural Resource Group (Dovetail), on behalf of the Virginia Department of Rail and Public Transportation (DRPT), conducted a reconnaissance-level architectural survey of the Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg (DJFB) segment of the Washington, D.C. to Richmond Southeast High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) project. The proposed Project is being completed under the auspice of the Federal Rail Administration (FRA) in conjunction with DRPT. Because of FRA's involvement, the undertaking is required to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, as amended. The project is being completed as Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) File Review #2014-0666.

The DC2RVA corridor is divided into 20 segments; this document includes background data that will place each recorded resource within context and the results of fieldwork and National Register of Historic Places (NRHP) evaluations for all architectural resources identified in the Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg segment only. All other segments will be discussed in later reports. For the purposes of the current report, the architectural area of potential effects (APE) is defined as extending 500 feet on either side of the center of the existing railroad alignment except in urban areas, where the APE is limited to one city block to either side of the existing rail centerline, plus any areas where alterations to a resource's setting and feeling are likely to occur as a result of the Project. This report details the findings of buildings, objects, and districts over 48 years of age within the APE (the age limit was developed to correspond with the 2017 project completion date). All structures that meet the NRHP 50-year age criterion within the architectural APE of the DC2RVA corridor will be included in a subsequent report spanning the entire 123-mile corridor. The results of the archaeological survey are also discussed in separate reports.

In total, DC2RVA Project Team surveyed 271 historic architectural resources within the architectural APE within the DJFB segment. Of these, 146 previously recorded and 125 newly recorded historic resources were identified. Within the 271 total properties, it is recommended that the majority (n=260) are not eligible for individual listing on the NRHP. Four resources, including two battlefields, one historic district, and one site, were previously determined potentially eligible or eligible for, or listed in, the NRHP (088-5181, 111-0132, 111-0145, and 111-5296). The DC2RVA Project Team recommends that these resources retain their previous eligibility status. In addition, as a result of the current survey, seven resources, including one district, one battlefield, and five individual buildings, are recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP (111-0009, 111-0009-0795, 111-0023, 111-0132-0020, 111-0132-0522, 111-0132-0704, and 111-5295).

In addition to their individual eligibility recommendation, many resources within the DJFB segment are located within the boundaries one of the two eligible or potentially eligible historic districts: the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) and the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). As a result, it is recommended that 25 properties are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension and 92 properties are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

1 INTRODUCTION

Dovetail Cultural Resource Group (Dovetail), on behalf of the Virginia Department of Rail and Public Transportation (DRPT), conducted a reconnaissance-level architectural survey of the Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg (DJFB) segment of the Washington, D.C. to Richmond High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) project. In addition to the reconnaissance-level survey, this project includes a background review and historic context for the DJFB segment. The project is being completed as Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) File #2014-0666.

The Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) and DRPT propose passenger rail service and rail infrastructure improvements in the north-south travel corridor between Washington, D.C. and Richmond, VA. These passenger rail service and rail infrastructure improvements are collectively known as the DC2RVA project. The Project will deliver higher speed passenger rail service, increase passenger and freight rail capacity, and improve passenger rail service frequency and reliability in a corridor shared by growing volumes of passenger, commuter, and freight rail traffic, thereby providing a competitive option for travelers going between Washington, D.C. and Richmond and those traveling to and from adjacent connecting corridors. The Project is part of the larger Southeast High Speed Rail (SEHSR) corridor (Figure 1-1), which extends from Washington, D.C. through Richmond, VA, and from Richmond continues east to Hampton Roads (Norfolk), VA and south to Raleigh, NC, and Charlotte, NC, and then continues west to Atlanta and south to Florida. The Project connects to the National Railroad Passenger Corporation (Amtrak) Northeast Corridor (NEC) at Union Station in Washington, D.C.

The purpose of the SEHSR program, as stated in the 2002 Tier I Final Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) completed for the full SEHSR corridor, is to provide a competitive transportation choice to travelers within the Washington, D.C. to Charlotte travel corridor. The purpose of the current Washington, D.C. to Richmond SEHSR project described here is to fulfill the purpose of the SEHSR Tier I EIS within this segment of the larger SEHSR corridor. The Project, by increasing rail capacity and improving travel times between Washington, D.C. and Richmond, will improve passenger train performance and reliability in the corridor, enabling intercity passenger rail to be a competitive transportation choice for travelers between Washington, D.C. and Richmond and beyond.

Given FRA's funding involvement and permitting through various other federal agencies, the DC2RVA project is required to comply with Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, as amended, and its implementing regulations under 36CFR800. Additionally, all cultural resource work was designed to comply with the Virginia Antiquities Act (Code of Virginia § 10.1-2300) and guidelines and regulations promulgated by the DHR as necessary.

1.1 PROJECT LOCATION

The Washington, D.C. to Richmond corridor spans 123 miles along an existing rail corridor owned by CSX Transportation (CSXT) between Control Point RO (milepost [MP] CFP 110) in Arlington, VA to the CSXT A-Line and S-Line junction at MP A-11 in Centralia, VA (Chesterfield County) (Figure 1-2). For the purposes of engineering and environmental planning, the DC2RVA corridor has been subdivided into 20 segments that correspond with improvements and alternatives, and as such have been named and numbered from north to south (Figure 1-3). At the northern terminus in Arlington, VA, the Project limit ends at the southern approach to Long Bridge, a double-track rail bridge taking the rail corridor over the Potomac River; however, the northern terminus of Union Station in Washington, D.C. will be used for ridership and revenue forecasting, as well as service development planning within the Project corridor. The southern terminus in Centralia is the junction of two CSXT routes that begin in Richmond and rejoin approximately 11 miles south of the city.

Additional segments of the Project include approximately 8.3 miles of the CSXT Peninsula Subdivision CA-Line from Beulah Road (MP CA-76.1) in Henrico County, VA to AM Junction in the City of Richmond, and the approximately 26-mile Buckingham Branch Railroad (BBR) from AM Junction to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railway (RF&P) Crossing (MP CA-111.8) in Doswell, VA.

Proposed improvements are along CSXT-owned track, generally parallel to the I-95 corridor between northern Virginia and Richmond. From north to south, the project travels through the following counties and cities:

- Arlington County
- City of Alexandria
- Fairfax County
- Prince William County
- Stafford County
- City of Fredericksburg
- Spotsylvania County
- Caroline County
- Hanover County
- Henrico County
- City of Richmond
- Chesterfield County

In Arlington, the Project connects to existing CSXT track extending across the Potomac River on the Long Bridge into Washington, D.C. and Union Station, the southern terminus of Amtrak's Northeast Corridor (NEC). At Centralia, the Project connects to both the Richmond to Raleigh segment of the SEHSR corridor and the Richmond to Hampton Roads segment of the SEHSR corridor. The Washington, D.C. to Richmond segment is an integral part of the overall Washington, D.C. to Charlotte SEHSR corridor and provides a critical link between high speed intercity passenger service from Boston to Washington, D.C. and the southeastern United States.

1.2 PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The DC2RVA project will include specific rail infrastructure improvements and service upgrades intended to improve the travel time, service frequency, and on-time performance of passenger trains operating between Washington, D.C. and Richmond, VA. Specific improvements to the existing rail infrastructure between Arlington, VA, and Centralia, VA include:

- Corridor-wide upgrades to existing track and signal systems to achieve higher operating speeds, including curve realignments, higher-speed crossovers between tracks, passing sidings, and grade crossing improvements.
- Corridor-wide improvements to train operating capacity to achieve higher passenger train service frequency and reliability, including an additional main track along most of the corridor, and additional controlled sidings, crossovers, yard bypasses and leads, and other capacity and reliability improvements at certain locations.
- Station and platform improvements for Amtrak and Virginia Railway Express (VRE) stations.

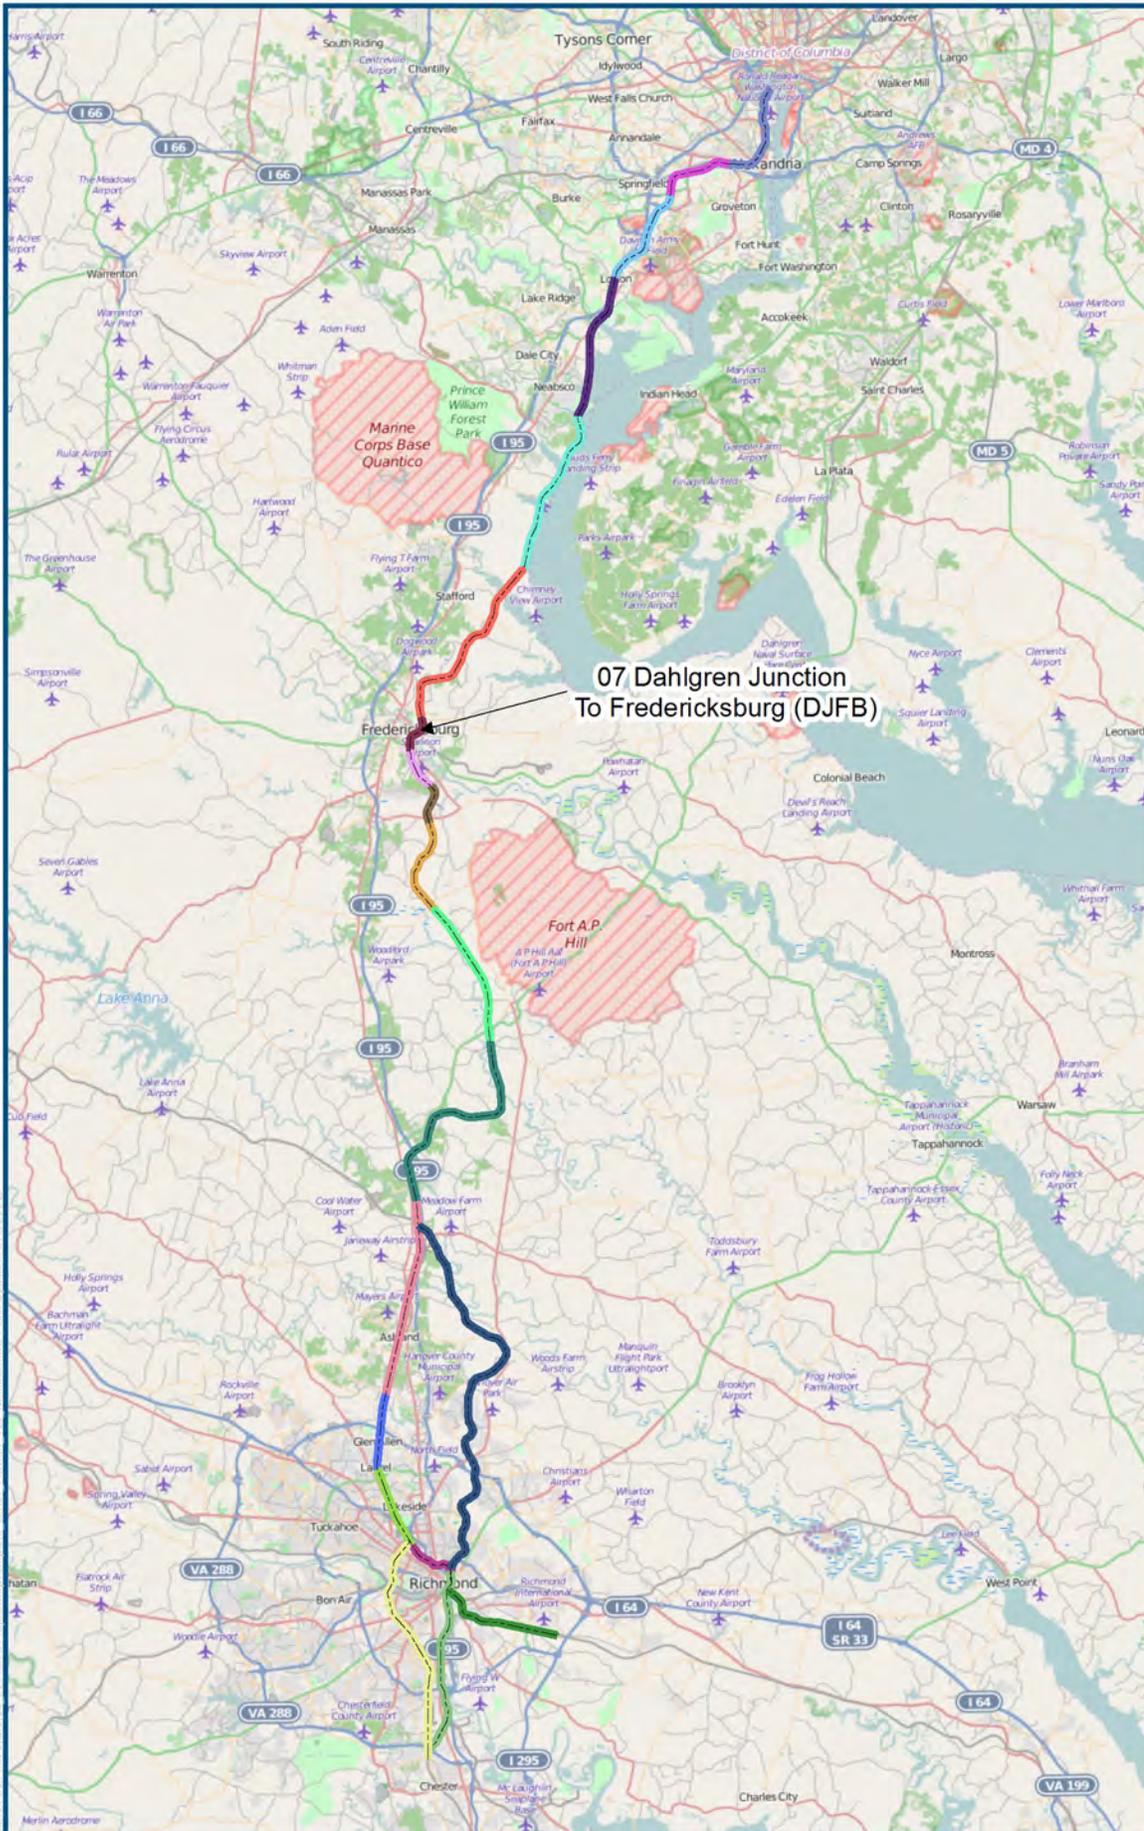

The Tier II EIS being completed for the Project will assess the environmental impacts of these improvements and identify ways to avoid, minimize, or otherwise mitigate such impacts.

The Project may include locations for new or replacement intercity passenger stations on the Project corridor, and additional rail capacity and other improvements in the Richmond area, including on the CSXT Peninsula Subdivision from AM Junction in Richmond, VA (just north of Main Street Station) east to Beulah Road in Henrico County, and on the Buckingham Branch Railroad from Doswell, VA south to AM Junction.

Studies in support of the Project will address passenger and freight rail operations and service between Union Station in Washington, D.C. and Richmond and beyond, but the Project does not include physical improvements to the Long Bridge across the Potomac River or to rail infrastructure within Washington, D.C. Other projects will address improvements to the rail infrastructure north of Arlington and south of Centralia along the SEHSR corridor.

1.3 CURRENT STUDY

The current study included a reconnaissance architectural survey of the DJFB segment of the DC2RVA corridor (Figure 1-4). The architectural survey was conducted to evaluate both previously recorded properties that have not been evaluated for the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP), as well as any unrecorded resource over 48 years in age (the age limit was developed to correspond to the 2017 project completion date). Any property in the area of potential effects (APE) that has been previously determined to be eligible, or is listed in, the NRHP was briefly reviewed to assure that the characteristics that rendered the property eligible are still intact. For the purposes of the current report, the architectural APE is defined as extending 500 feet on either side of the center of the existing railroad alignment, except in urban areas, where the APE is limited to one city block to either side of the existing rail centerline, plus any areas where alterations to a resource's setting and feeling are likely to occur as a result of the Project. All structures that meet the NRHP age criteria within the architectural APE of the DC2RVA corridor will be included in a subsequent report spanning the entire 123-mile corridor. In addition, the results of the archaeological survey are discussed in separate documents.

Each resource was evaluated in regards to NRHP Criterion A, for its association with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; Criterion B, for its association with people significant in our nation's history; Criterion C, for its embodiment of distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or possess high artistic values; and Criterion D, for its potential to yield information important in history.

The area within the Project APE was first reviewed through an architectural and historical background literature and records search at DHR. The APE was then visually inspected through a vehicular and pedestrian reconnaissance to identify buildings, objects, and districts over 48 years in age where a NRHP determination had not been made. Once identified, each resource was evaluated for architectural significance and historic and physical integrity. The resources were documented through written notes and digital photographs. The information obtained during the survey was then used to update or generate a new DHR Virginia Cultural Resource Information System (V-CRIS) form and to make recommendations on each resource's NRHP potential.

2 HISTORIC CONTEXT

As part of this undertaking, a historic context of each municipality within the APE was compiled. The DJFB segment spans two separate municipalities: Stafford County and the City of Fredericksburg. Because this report discusses the architectural component of this project, only the historic period for both Stafford County (Section 2.1) and the City of Fredericksburg (Section 2.2) are included below. The prehistoric context for these areas will appear in subsequent archaeological reports.

2.1 STAFFORD COUNTY

While some sources state that Europeans explored the area around Stafford County as early as 1570 (Alvey 1978:1), it was John Smith who left the first written record of his visit in his Generall Historie of Virginia (Smith 1966), originally published in 1624. Smith described his 1608 explorations along both the Rappahannock and Potomac rivers while he was looking for trading opportunities and other resources. During his travels in the area, Smith and his companions met members of the powerful and widespread Patowomeke tribe, and visited what was believed to be their principal village to trade corn (Blanton 1999). This site is located on what is today Marlborough Point.

2.1.1 Anglo Settlement and the Establishment of Stafford

From 1608 to the 1640s, European settlement in what became Stafford County was rare. Giles Brent, a Catholic from Maryland, moved into Stafford County in 1647 along Aquia Creek. His sisters Margaret and Mary soon joined him, and a small community developed at the Brent settlement. In 1664, Stafford County was formed from the western part of Westmoreland County. Originally, Stafford included what are today Prince William, Fairfax, Fauquier, Loudoun, Arlington, and parts of King George counties (Netherton et al. 2004). The first courthouse was located on Potomac Creek, but it moved to Marlborough Point in 1692. By this time, the point had become a thriving port community built on top of the old Native American village.

During the last decades of the seventeenth century, the population of Stafford gradually increased as settlers moved into the region to work the fertile lands and take advantage of the numerous water resources. Among the families who established plantations at this time were the Fitzhughs, whose Eagle's Nest Plantation was one of the largest landholdings in the general region. Most plantation owners and small farmers relied on tobacco as their primary cash crop. The plant took very well to the Virginia soils. Due to new tariffs and regulations established by Lieutenant Governor Alexander Spotswood in 1712, planters could be assured of a fair price despite the growing Virginia political climate (Havighurst 1967). Along with an increase in agricultural production, Stafford planters brought in more and more enslaved Africans to work the land. Like most of Virginia, slavery quickly took over the indentured servant system in the first decades of the eighteenth century.

In 1718, the courthouse at Marlborough Point was destroyed by fire, and the court complex moved to Stoneman's Landing. It remained at Stoneman's for the next 60 years, finally moving to its present site in 1783 (Goolrick 1976). In addition to the new settlement at Stoneman's Landing, another new and prosperous port founded within the first decades of the eighteenth century was Falmouth, located along the Rappahannock River. An act of the Virginia Assembly in 1728 directed the laying out of the town of Falmouth, along with Fredericksburg and other prospective urban centers (Eby 1997).

2.1.2 Early Industries and the Revolutionary War

In addition to agriculture, other industries thrived in the county during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. Accokeek Iron Mine was founded along Accokeek Creek, and Hunter's Iron Works was founded in Falmouth. During the Revolutionary War, Hunter's produced pots, camp kettles, anchors, muskets, bayonets, pistols, shovels, and other materials for the Army (Eby 1997:308-311; Writer's Program of Virginia 1992:349). A British customs officer who traveled through Falmouth during the war called the enterprise "the greatest ironworks that is upon the Continent" (quoted in Conner 2003:207).

A second thriving industry was stone quarrying. Although the presence of high-quality sandstone was known at the beginning of the eighteenth century (i.e., Barile 2004), it wasn't until the last decades of the century that the stone was quarried for large-scale building projects. One of the most successful sandstone quarries belonged to William Robertson (Eby 1997:139). He established his quarry along the northern branch of Austin Run and soon moved his family to a site adjacent to the quarry. Stone from his quarry and nearby Government Island was used to build the White House in Washington, D.C.

The post-Revolutionary War years brought about numerous changes in Stafford's economy. By this time, tobacco had depleted most of the soils, and the majority of area farmers had moved to the production of grains. With the new crop came new production needs. Port towns like Falmouth became the economic and social centers of the county, as farmers used the growing number of mills and warehouses to process and store their crops (Johnson 1996, 1997).

Milling began in Stafford County as early as the late-seventeenth century but experienced its biggest growth during early- to-mid nineteenth century. In 1861, at the height of the industry's development, there were at least sixteen known mills operating in Stafford County (Eby 1997:145-152). As Stafford County's milling industry steadily emerged, various subsidiary businesses also rapidly developed to house, feed, and entertain those who came to town to process their goods. Because of this, Falmouth was at the height of its commercial prosperity from the 1780s through the 1810s (Eby 1997; Goolrick 1976).

2.1.3 The Antebellum Years

Because of a dramatic shift in transportation routes and a gradually diminished need for grain flour, Stafford County and Falmouth underwent a decline during the Antebellum period. This downturn in the town's fortunes was probably intensified by the gradual silting up of the river. Steamboats now traveled to small ports on Potomac and Aquia creeks to retrieve goods and passengers, and the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac Railroad was established between Aquia Creek and Richmond in 1842 (Netherton et al. 2004:43).

Despite a declining economy, stone quarrying continued to be a successful venture. In 1820, 90 “quarriers” were listed in the county-wide census. Continued building efforts in the capital city, along with a steady supply of slave labor and northern financial backing provided the local industry with necessary resources. Substantial quarrying continued until the stone quality diminished.

2.1.4 The Civil War in Stafford County

Stafford County is situated between the capitals of the Union and Confederacy and became the crossroads of military activity during the Civil War. After the fighting in the winter of 1862, the Federal Army of the Potomac went into winter camp, and numerous Federal units bivouacked in southern Stafford County over the next eight months (Carter 1997; Civil War Sites Advisory Committee [CWSAC] 1999; Musselman 1995).

During the Fredericksburg-Chancellorsville campaigns, from November 1862 through June 1863, Stafford County was occupied by 130,000 troops of the Federal Army of the Potomac, and its military encampments occupied thousands of acres from Aquia Creek south to the Rappahannock River. With a force numbering 130,000 troops, the effect of the army’s presence was devastating. Troops traveled over almost all of the roads established in the county at that time, and many properties were used as encampments. These camps, especially winter encampments, completely obliterated the landscape of a once-pristine countryside. Soldiers dug hut holes for their winter housing in agricultural fields, woods, and in the yards of the area’s residents. Nearly every tree in sight was cut down for their huts, for firewood, and in some cases for corduroy roads. Soldiers looted dwellings for supplies, took down fences, and removed windows.

The Civil War decimated the physical and cultural fabric of Stafford County. Despite the destruction, area inhabitants remained in town and were determined to rebuild their lives and their homes. According to author and Stafford resident Homer Musselman (1995:vii, 77-86), “No county in the United States felt the war so harshly as Stafford.” When the war ended, Stafford was utterly devoid of stock, food, and forage, and the soil had gone down or grown up in brush. Hundreds of homes had been burned, the records at Stafford Court House had been half destroyed, and those that remained were damaged.

In addition to the Union occupation of Falmouth and large-scale troop movement activity, Stafford County was the site of one Civil War battle. The Battle of Aquia Creek was part of the Chesapeake Bay blockade that occurred between May 29 and June 1, 1861. During the battle, Confederate batteries under the direction of Colonel Daniel Ruggles at the mouth of Aquia Creek were bombarded by three Union ships, led by Commander James H. Ward. Despite a feared land attack by Union troops, the landing never materialized. The results of the battle were inconclusive (Carter 1997; CWSAC 1999). Confederate batteries and depots along Aquia Creek were later withdrawn.

2.1.5 Into the Twentieth Century

By the turn of the century, the population began to return to their pre-war numbers. One of the most famous new residents of the county in the early twentieth century was artist Gari

Melchers. Melchers purchased Belmont—the frame mansion house on the western edge of Falmouth (circa 1761)—and added a large studio wing to the house. He spent the rest of his life at Belmont painting vernacular landscapes of Falmouth and the surrounding area (Writer’s Program of Virginia 1992:349).

2.1.6 World War I to World War II (1917–1945)

In the first decades of the twentieth century, Stafford County’s transportation networks continued to grow, particularly its roadways after the formal establishment of the state’s Department of Highways in 1927 (Virginia Department of Transportation [VDOT] 2006:30). That same year, an important route through Stafford County was established; “after over 25 years of consideration, newspaper editorials, town meetings, financial discussions and legislative debate the Jefferson Davis Highway, also known as the Washington-Richmond Highway or US Highway No. 1, was fully paved and open for business” (Schricker 2014).

Area waterways continued to provide transportation to both passengers and goods in this period, though the oyster and fishing industry was on a decline from its peak in the late-nineteenth century after decades over fishing depleted resources (Conner 2003:212). Railroads remained an important form of transportation and reinforced growth of the local economy as the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac Railroad had expanded to a double-track by 1907 and continued to upgrade area bridges and other rail-related facilities into the 1940s (Conner 2003:205). The lumber industry also profited from increased transportation options in Stafford County, aided by the popular use of cordwood in railroad ties (Conner 2003:213).

During the Great Depression, many New Deal programs affected Stafford County, including several Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) camps and improvement projects, including soil conservation work planting trees, cutting fire lanes in forested areas, digging drainage ditches, and constructing fences (Conner 2003:215).

The area’s proximity to the nation’s capital and location along the Potomac River made Stafford County a good fit for the burgeoning development of the Marine Corps. As the United States grew closer to participation in World War I, the Marine Corps took on a greater role within the armed forces—expanding to be part of the American Expeditionary Force. The Marines had been stationed at naval bases since the Spanish-American War, but had since outgrown the space allotted to them. With a changing role (the Department of State had used the Marine Corps as a guerilla force in Central and Southern America), training conditions and bases needed to be modified (Blumenthal 2003:7). In 1917, Marine officers leased a plot of 5,300 acres located near Quantico in Stafford County. Later that year, the leasing company fell into hardship and was forced to sell the property to the United States government (Evans 1989:68). The Marine Corps Reservation continued to grow throughout World War II, promoting residential growth in Prince William and Stafford counties.

2.1.7 The New Dominion to Present

The years after World War II were crucial in defining the current landscape for the entire Northern Virginia region. The federal government expanded, bringing with it lobbying groups and research and development enterprises (Evans 1989:130). The 1956 Highway Act paved the way for Interstate 95, rolling southward from Washington, D.C. This superhighway allowed commuters an easy way to reach their offices within the District of Columbia (Evans 1989:130).

Government expansion, returning veterans receiving housing incentives, and the creation of Interstates 95 (I-95) and 66 (I-66) allowed development to reach the boundaries of Stafford County by the 1960s.

Over the past several decades, development in Stafford County has reached an all-time high. According to the County, “the built environment of Stafford County is relatively new. Since the construction of Interstate 95 in the 1960s through the County, population has doubled every 20 years” (Stafford County Planning Commission 2010). New commuter options such as the Virginia Rail Express have led to the creation of new subdivisions near the I-95 corridor.

2.2 CITY OF FREDERICKSBURG

As Fredericksburg historian Robert Howison (1898:2) wrote: “I feel bound, as is the manner of all veracious historians, to begin at the beginning. But where the beginning is, or ought to be, may be a serious question.” The City of Fredericksburg has a rich history that spans over four centuries and is summarized in detail in the following sections.

2.2.1 Contact Period and the Seventeenth Century

There was little European settlement in the area around present-day Fredericksburg until 1655, when the first land patent in the area was given to Margaret Brent for 1,000 acres (Felder 1982:3; Mansfield 1977:75). In 1666, Lawrence Smith and Robert Taliaferro patented 6,300 acres just south of Fredericksburg (Goolrick 1935). The Virginia House of Burgesses commissioned Smith to build a fort on this property in 1676 to encourage settlement in the area (Felder 1982:5). The fort was to be developed as a community for 250 people, garrisoned by soldiers and furnished with ample munitions to ward off any encroachers (Goolrick 1922:10; Mansfield 1977:2). Though Smith’s fort was originally conceived as a sort of “gateway” to the west, only a few temporary structures were built in the area, and no settlers moved there (Alvey 1978:2). The fort was disbanded by the House in 1682 (Mansfield 1977:2).

2.2.2 The Leaseland and Fredericksburgh Town

The future townsite of Fredericksburg was granted to John Buckner and Thomas Royston in 1671. Though they never lived on this 2,000 acre property, they immediately leased the land to William and Sukey Livingston, which is how the area became known as “The Leaseland” from the 1670s through the 1720s (Alvey 1978:1; Mansfield 1977:11). The community remained a small river enclave through the first two decades of the eighteenth century.

The largest and most successful precursor of future settlement in the general region occurred in 1714. Alexander Spotswood arrived in Virginia in 1710 to become the Lieutenant Governor. Spotswood quickly realized that the success of the colony lay in westward expansion, and he established two frontier forts in 1714 to achieve this goal. One fort was Christianna, located in what is today Brunswick County, just southwest of Richmond. The second fort was located on a peninsula of the Rapidan River west of what is today Fredericksburg. The pentagonal fort was built and inhabited by a group of Germans from the Nassau-Siegen region. In honor of these 12 families of Germans and Queen Anne of England, the fort was named Germanna (Barile 2004; Wayland 1989:10). Realizing the potential for the area to act as a frontier community, Spotswood brought over two additional groups of German indentured servants in 1717 and 1719, and the population of the Germanna area grew to over 200 people (Barile 2004; Schurict 1977:66–69).

Prior to the founding of Fort Germanna, the only transportation routes in this area were the waterways and few forest paths created by Native Americans (VDOT 2002:2). The first European-based roadway in the area was a bridle path, ordered by the Virginia council in April 1714 (Mansfield 1977; Pawlett 1977; VDOT 2002). The Germanna path was developed by the Fort Germanna settlers and led from the falls near the Leaseland to the fort (Mansfield 1977:38). A few years later, a rolling road was built through this area (Mansfield 1977; Pawlett 1977; VDOT 2002). The new road, appropriately called Mines Road, connected Germanna to Spotswood's Tubal Iron Works and his newest enterprise, a wharf on Massaponax Run, located between the iron mines and the Leaseland (Quinn 1908:22).

In 1720, Spotswood pushed the House to create Spotsylvania County with Germanna as the county seat (Felder 1982:13). This new county contained The Leaseland, Massaponax Wharf, Tubal Iron Works, and Germanna (Felder 1982:13). The county court at Germanna ran smoothly for the first few years, but several key officials and planters of Spotsylvania County repeatedly petitioned the House of Burgesses to move the county seat to a more convenient location. In 1728, the House finally addressed the issue and decided that a town should be formally created at The Leaseland. The town was to incorporate 50 acres on the Rappahannock River and was to be renamed Fredericksburgh Town (Felder 1982:33).

2.2.3 The Eighteenth Century

The county seat of Spotsylvania officially moved to Fredericksburg on October 1, 1732 for the convenience of all inhabitants and county officials. A courthouse was begun in town, as well as a church, prison, and other governmental and commercial structures (Mansfield 1977:89). The town wharfs also provided the first public river docks in the area. Although Spotswood offered the use of his wharves at Massaponax to area residents for a fee, many began to ship from Fredericksburg in the 1730s to avoid the extra cost. Numerous warehouses developed around the Fredericksburg waterfront in the mid-eighteenth century to accommodate the new business, most of which were concentrated around what are today Sophia and Wolfe streets.

Throughout the 1730s and 1740s, Fredericksburg grew slowly as new businesses developed to cater to the courthouse and commerce crowds. As a testament to the developing tone of town use, it is estimated that there were almost an equal number of taverns/ordinaries and warehouses in the 1740s (Willis and Felder 1987:4). The growth trend continued in the 1750s, as the first land addition was made to the original 50-acre town to accommodate the influx of new inhabitants and businesses. Occupation slowly moved from the center near the wharves northward along Caroline Street. The Fielding Lewis Store, built in 1749, anchored the northern segment of town and offered goods on the main road out of town and on the way to William Thornton's mills on the north side of the community (Historic Fredericksburg Foundation, Inc. [HFFI] 2005). The store, still standing, is considered to be one of the oldest retail buildings in the United States (HFFI 2005).

By the eve of the American Revolution, Fredericksburg was a successful shipping port town. However, inhabitants of Spotsylvania County again voiced their dissatisfaction about the location of the county seat. For many living on the western side of the county, travel into Fredericksburg was an arduous journey. In 1778, the county seat of Spotsylvania was moved from Fredericksburg to a site on the Po River near the center of the county. Regardless, the activity surrounding the wharves and the growing town population sustained Fredericksburg through the loss of the courthouse traffic. The town was incorporated in 1781, and the diversity of the population was reflected in the new businesses and organizations developed in the 1780s. This includes the establishment of the area's first newspaper in 1787, The Virginia Herald and Fredericksburg and Falmouth Advertiser, published by Timothy Green (Overcash and Plotkin 1993).

2.2.4 From Tobacco to Flour and Antebellum Growth

The period from the 1780s through the 1820s was marked by a dramatic increase in the shipping and milling industry in Fredericksburg and the nearby town of Falmouth. Whereas early shipping primarily concentrated on tobacco, by the end of the eighteenth century, soils in the area were completely depleted. Farmers turned to new crops to sustain the family plantations, primarily wheat. Wheat had numerous economic advantages over tobacco, especially for urban areas. Not only was it a successful crop for farmers and plantation owners, but processing of wheat required several more enterprises prior to shipment, including roads and wagons for transportation, warehouses for storage, mills for processing, and merchants for sales (Kulikoff 1986). Also, the baking industry thrived as many marketers chose to ship baked goods as opposed to raw wheat flour.

Grain mills and merchants' warehouses were erected along the Rappahannock River. The Fredericksburg Canal carried the water necessary to propel the mills' waterwheels. The warehouses held flour, tobacco, and later cotton awaiting shipment as well as imported consumer and other goods, and farmers, haulers, and watermen took use of the town's inns and taverns. Falmouth and Fredericksburg's exports in flour, which had reached their highest point in 1816 at 160,000 barrels, had been reported at 126,000 barrels in 1831. The export quantity ranked third in the state of Virginia, only behind Richmond and Alexandria (Johnson 1997:31).

Throughout this time, the town of Fredericksburg continued to grow. Population of the urban area rose after the American Revolution as new industries and thus employment developed in town. In 1807, a devastating fire swept through downtown Fredericksburg that destroyed over 200 buildings and left over 100 families homeless; about one-half of the town was destroyed (Alvey 1988). In actuality, there were at least five large-scale fires in Fredericksburg over a 25 year period (1799, 1807, 1816, 1822, 1823). Despite these catastrophes, the town was rebuilt albeit with better building materials. "By the mid-1820s, the combination of repeated fire, subdivision of downtown lots, and a concern for fire created a tightly packed core in Fredericksburg with virtually no eighteenth century fabric left, except at the periphery" (Stanton 1997:124).

2.2.5 The Antebellum Years

Although flour export decreased after 1820, Fredericksburg continued to prosper as a port town. In 1822, it was made a postal center for distribution of all United States mail to five states, and goods from surrounding counties continued to be shipped from the busy wharves. Fluctuations in the national economy are directly reflected in the land tax records of 1824 and 1825. After the Financial Panic of 1819, the early 1820s brought financial uncertainty to large sections of the country. Like previous and subsequent economic panics, the proceeding years brought about an economic depression. Costs for material goods and real estate skyrocketed. By 1835, the slight economic slump of the 1820s receded. Fredericksburg had a population of over 3,000 people, including whites, free blacks, and slaves. There were five churches, over a dozen schools, and numerous other businesses such as taverns and merchants (Willis and Felder 1987:6). Business continued to succeed over the next few decades. By 1840, the town exported over $4 million worth of goods annually.

Labor within the urban area of Fredericksburg at this time comprised native whites, European immigrants, free blacks, and slaves, with enslaved African Americans making up the largest percentage of the area workforce. In 1850, for example, slaves made up one-half of the population (Stanton 1997:127), and with the exception of the very old and very young, the entire slave population were commercial or household laborers. The town included 730 households in 1860, all of which would soon become directly embroiled within one of the most monumental events in Fredericksburg history, the Civil War.

2.2.6 The Civil War

2.2.6.1 First and Second Battles of Fredericksburg

Fredericksburg was a disappointing and fruitless campaign that resulted in a major defeat for the new Union commander, Ambrose E. Burnside. The success of the campaign relied on the element of surprise, in hopes to avoid a confrontation with Lee at Fredericksburg. Burnside proposed a plan to expediently march into Falmouth by way of the Rappahannock River and then cross into Fredericksburg. Once there, travel to the Pamunkey River (where a new base of supply awaited) via the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac Railroad would be relatively trouble-free (Marvel 1993:3).

However, the Rappahannock River bridges had been burned at Fredericksburg, thus requiring the use of pontoon bridges. Unfortunately, the army's pontoons remained on the Upper Potomac where they were last used. In spite of this, Union generals assured Burnside that the pontoons would be waiting for him and that it would take approximately three days. Disappointingly, their arrival was not punctual. The majority of the pontoons finally arrived November 27, 1862—about ten days after Burnside had expected them. By this time, Lee had long suspected an attack on Fredericksburg. Burnside and his soldiers could no longer expect a lightly defended town and thereby a straightforward take over. The Federals first crossed the Rappahannock on December 11. The majority would follow the next day (Marvel 1993:3–4).

December 12, after laying artillery on Fredericksburg, Union soldiers poured over five pontoon bridges (built that day) while Lee strengthened his battle line along the ridge overlooking Rappahannock valley. On December 13, Burnside attacked the seven mile Confederate line at point one: below Fredericksburg, where “Stonewall” Jackson occupied the Confederate right; and point two: Marye’s Heights behind the town where James Longstreet’s corps held the position. Burnside ordered too small an attack and, despite a Union division’s accomplishment to break Jackson’s line, the Federal effort failed. Confederate troops held an advantageous position on the heights and had infantry literally behind a stone wall. During the night on December 15, Burnside returned his troops back across the river ending the campaign (Willis and Felder 1993:52).

Burnside made another attempt to cross the Rappahannock in January 1863. This quickly dissolved into the abortive “Mud March.” This, along with other failures, led to the replacement of General Burnside (CWSAC 2002). Interestingly, his replacement was the original choice for successor to General George B. McClellan, Major General Joseph Hooker (Marvel 1993:3).

2.2.6.2 Battle of Salem Church

As General Hooker replaced Burnside as the commander of the Union forces, he decided that a second frontal assault on Lee's forces, entrenched in Fredericksburg, was unwise. Hooker decided that he would move his troops 25 miles upstream to cross the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford and move back east behind Lee's troops to attack Lee on two fronts. He left General Sedgwick in command of a limited number of troops on the north side of the Rappahannock in Fredericksburg to distract Lee (Stackpole 1958:92-102).

Taking a wide birth to the west, Union forces encountered extensive Confederate defenses at U.S. Ford, but Confederate forces retired from the river leaving Hooker in control of U.S. Ford without any losses on May 1, 1863. Lee received word of Hooker's maneuver and decided to split his inferior forces and move the majority of his troops to the west, leaving only one-sixth of his force in Fredericksburg (Happel 1980:27).

As Lee arrived at Chancellorsville on May 2, he decided to again split his forces and flank Hooker, who at this point was entrenched at a house called Chancellorsville above U.S. Ford. The reconnaissance for the flanking force, led by Jackson, discovered the Union weakness of that flank, resting on no natural obstacle or strong point. Jackson successfully attacked the Union right in the late afternoon but in the confusion and darkness of the night Jackson was fatally wounded by his own troops (Happel 1980:27-28; Stackpole 1958:230-255).

As Jackson smashed through the Union right, Hooker urgently called Sedgwick to move west to bolster his forces at Chancellorsville. Sedgwick did so, moving through Fredericksburg in the Second Battle of Fredericksburg with resistance from General Jubal Early's forces. However, Early was so undermanned that the taking of Fredericksburg, which was previously deemed impossible, was achieved with relative ease. Early moved his troops east several miles as Sedgwick moved through town and reoccupied Fredericksburg at Marye's Heights the following day. Due to this maneuver, Sedgwick now found himself sandwiched between Confederate forces, just as Hooker had hoped to do to Lee with his flanking maneuver (Happel 1980:28; Stackpole 1958:306-317).

Sedgwick moved west towards Chancellorsville along Plank Road, modern-day Route 3, encountering little more than skirmishes until arriving in the vicinity of Salem Church. Since Hooker had failed to again engage the Confederate forces, General McLaws' and later General Anderson's divisions were dispatched from Chancellorsville to the east when Lee received word of Sedgwick's movements. With McLaws' forces occupying a ridge line, the Union forces attacked and eventually drove them back. By the afternoon of May 4, however, Anderson's forces had positioned themselves to the south of Sedgwick and he was hemmed in on three sides (Happel 1980:29-35). Sedgwick received dispatch from Hooker the afternoon of May 4 telling him that he was too far abreast to direct and that he should keep the safety of his troops in mind. Sedgwick decided to hold his position and wait for the Confederate attack (Stackpole 1958:339).

Lee, having decided that Hooker was not going to move to reinforce Sedgwick, planned to drive Sedgwick north across the river. As Anderson's troops got into position late in the day on May 4, the attack began with Early and Anderson forcing the Union troops north across Plank Road. Unfortunately, the Confederates took heavy casualties in this attack due to strong artillery support for the Federals (Stackpole 1958:342).

Lee, in uncharacteristic fashion, ordered his first night attack of the war to drive Sedgwick across the river. This decision was driven by Lee's concern that Sedgwick would be able to dig in overnight and they would have to fight the day's battle all over again the next day. Sedgwick decided to cross the river and had a second bridge placed at Scott's Ford, and by 2 to 3 a.m. on May 5 all of his troops had crossed the river and the Battle of Salem Church was completed (Stackpole 1958:342-344).

2.2.7 Reconstruction and Growth

The Civil War decimated the physical and cultural fabric of the Fredericksburg area. Despite the destruction, area inhabitants remained in town and were determined to rebuild their lives and their homes. In addition to those who lived there before the war, the population of Fredericksburg grew greatly in the years just after the war. Emancipated slaves moved into town looking for employment, and white farmers looked to the area factories and commercial businesses for jobs since their farms were destroyed by Federal and Confederate troops. The town grew so rapidly and so large that Fredericksburg became a city in 1879 (Willis and Felder 1987).

Along with these changes, the daily operation of Fredericksburg changed during these decades from one reliant solely on the waterways to a rail-focused community. New roads were built to and from Fredericksburg for area farmers and merchants to deliver and receive goods on the railroad. Development sprawled from the commercial center to encompass new neighborhoods to the north and south of town, including Darbytown located south of the railroad tracks.

2.2.8 Into the Twentieth Century

At the beginning of the twentieth century, Fredericksburg was chosen as the location for the State Normal and Industrial School for women. Some of its first buildings were Monroe and Willard halls (Alvey 1974; DHR 2015). In 1938, the name was changed to Mary Washington College and again in 2004 to University of Mary Washington (Crawley 2008).

In 1912, Fredericksburg government underwent its first large-scale change in over a century, as it switched from a selectman-based system to a city manager plan. The new city manager was an integral participant in helping Fredericksburg incorporate the automobile into city planning, an invention that changed entire pattern of town occupation. The automobile allowed for area residents to live farther out of town and drive to work within the city. New neighborhoods developed in the first half of the twentieth century, many of which incorporated the Colonial Revival style—a direct nod to Fredericksburg's historic past (Johnston and Smith 2001; Schricker 2014; Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission 1970).

By the end of the 1920s, much of Fredericksburg's population was employed in the city's industrial sector. By the Great Depression, Fredericksburg's population included tens of thousands, many of whom were employed by large factories located south of town. The city remained heavily industrial in nature throughout most of the first half of the twentieth century (Johnston and Smith 2001; Schricker 2014; Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission 1970).

2.2.9 The New Dominion to Present

Throughout the remainder of the twentieth century, Fredericksburg grew exponentially. The creation of Interstate 95 and later Virginia Railway Express (VRE) made Fredericksburg a convenient place of residence for Washington, D.C. commuters. Although downtown Fredericksburg retains much of its turn-of-the-century characteristics, many areas along the city's outer fringes have been greatly altered through large-scale residential and commercial growth.

METHODOLOGY

The architectural survey was conducted to evaluate any historic buildings, structures, objects, or districts over 48 years in age for National Register of Historic Places (NRHP) eligibility. Each resource was evaluated in regards to Criterion A, for its association with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; Criterion B, for its association with people significant in our nation's history; and Criterion C, for its embodiment of distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or possess high artistic values. As part of the current survey, these architectural resources were not evaluated under Criterion D, for its potential to yield information important in history. Criteria considerations were taken into account only where necessary.

A background literature and records review of the area of potential effects (APE) at DHR was conducted prior to any fieldwork. This included an inspection of previous cultural resource surveys within the architectural APE and the notation of previously recorded architectural properties both within the APE and within a 0.5 mile radius of the APE to establish an area resource context.

Once the background review was complete, field recordation commenced. For previously recorded resources that were previously determined eligible for or listed in the NRHP within the architectural APE, the DC2RVA Project team briefly examined these properties to assure that they retain the characteristics that rendered them eligible for the NRHP, but in-depth studies were not completed on these resources.

During the architectural survey of both newly recorded and previously identified resources, the Project's architectural APE was surveyed through a combination of a vehicular and pedestrian reconnaissance. Above-ground properties meeting the age criteria of the NRHP were documented through photographs, written notes, and mapping. This includes buildings, objects, and districts that are within the project boundaries and in the viewshed of the project area. Digital photos will be taken of each property documenting the primary elevation, oblique angles, and general setting.

After the architectural field project was completed, the project team prepared separate Virginia Cultural Resource Information System (V-CRIS) forms and accompanying documentation for each recorded property in accordance with DHR policies and practices. Each V-CRIS packet includes a V-CRIS form, site plan, set of hard-copy black & white photographs, and a CD of digital photos for each property. The hard copy and electronic versions of the photographs were labeled and prepared according to DHR standards.

4 BACKGROUND REVIEW

Prior to conducting fieldwork, Dovetail conducted a background review of the Washington, D.C. to Richmond Southeast High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) project area to identify previously recorded above-ground resources within a 0.5 mile radius around the area of potential effects (APE). This task included an evaluation of Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) files, maps, and reports and Civil War Sites Advisory Committee (CWSAC) maps to obtain the required information. The goal was to provide data on previously recorded resources to aid in the evaluation of properties identified during the current survey.

4.1 PREVIOUS SURVEYS

Although numerous studies have been conducted in the downtown Fredericksburg area, only two overlap with the current APE. The William and Mary Center for Archaeological Research (WMCAR) conducted a reconnaissance-level architectural, cost-share survey sponsored by the City of Fredericksburg in partnership with the DHR in 2008 (Andre and Moore 2008). The survey concentrated on the City of Fredericksburg, and its purpose was to provide information and a NRHP eligibility recommendation for the existing listed historic district (Fredericksburg Historic District, 111-0132). Over a two-year period when the agreement between the City and DHR was established, a total of 1,000 resources were identified and surveyed. These resources included domestic, commercial, industrial, religious, social, governmental, and many more types of resources “related to the Settlement to Society Period through the New Dominion Period” (Andre and Moore 2008). Nine hundred forty-two resources were recommended to be contributing to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) under Criterion A for their overall contribution to the broad patterns of history and Criterion C for their contribution to the architectural integrity of the district. WMCAR recommended that a number of commercial blocks within the historic district expansion could benefit from state and federal rehabilitation tax credits.

In 2011, History Matters, LLC and Thunderbird Archeology conducted a Phase I cultural resource investigation of the 3.5 mile Virginia Central Railroad Trail project located within the City of Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County (Mullen et al. 2011). During this survey, 23 historic resources were identified within the indirect APE, 11 of which are contributing resources to the historic and architectural integrity of the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009). Among these resources within the indirect and direct APE is the Virginia Central Railroad Historic District (VCRHD) (088-5346), a potentially eligible historic district under NRHP Criterion A for contribution to the broad patterns of history within Fredericksburg. Ten historic resources were identified within the direct APE and are contributing resource to the VCRHD, including archaeological sites and several structures related to the railroad. Two of the four archaeological sites are historic, previously recorded sites (44SP0142 and 44SP0159) contain culverts and piers related to the rail bed and are considered potentially eligible for listing on the NRHP. One site (44SP0211) has no eligibility determination but also contains a portion of the extant rail bed. During this project, they also recorded one newly recorded archaeological site (44SP0639), a multi-component site that extends across the VCRHD. Conclusions from this survey resulted in identifying an adverse effect to several resources related to the VCRHD in the current DC2RVA project area.

4.2 PREVIOUSLY RECORDED CULTURAL RESOURCES

A total of 1,040 architectural properties have been previously recorded within 0.5 miles of the DC2RVA corridor in the Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg (DJFB) segment (see Appendix A for a complete listing of these resources). One resource, Ferry Farm/George Washington's Boyhood Home (089-0016), was listed in the Virginia Landmark Register (VLR) in 1971 and the NRHP in 1972, and was also designated as a National Historic Landmark (NHL) in 2000. The farm is nationally significant for being the boyhood home of George Washington.

The Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory (111-0145/44SP0006) is located within 0.5 miles of the APE and listed in the NRHP. This gun manufactory and associated buildings was constructed around 1775. Although the buildings are no longer extant, the archaeological site with over half of the remains in situ remains eligible under Criterion D. A historical marker signals the former location of the manufactory.

The Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132), located along the banks of the Rappahannock River, "encompasses an important assemblage of eighteenth, nineteenth, and early-twentieth century architectural styles" (Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission 1970). Numerous buildings within the district are also individually eligible for, or listed in, the NRHP. These resources are described below.

Three of the 1,040 resources identified within 0.5 miles of the project corridor have been previously determined eligible for listing on the NRHP by DHR staff: the Richmond, Fredericksburg, & Potomac Railroad (RF&P) (076-0301), Salem Church Battlefield (088-5181), and the Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad/Virginia Central Railroad Historic District (088-5364). The RF&P opened in 1836 and eventually spanned from the Potomac River to Richmond. In 2011, an 11-mile segment of the railroad in Prince William and Stafford counties was determined eligible for the NRHP by DHR. On March 22, 2000, the Salem Church Battlefield, the location of a Civil War battle, received a Federal Determination of Eligibility. The Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad/Virginia Central Railroad Historic District (088-5364) is a 38-mile-long railroad corridor that extends from the City of Fredericksburg to the town of Orange, VA. It was determined eligible by DHR staff due to its integrity of design, materials, location, and setting.

The Mary Washington College Historic District (111-0001) is a resource located within 0.5 miles of the DC2RVA corridor that was determined as potentially eligible for listing on the NRHP in 1991. It was determined potentially eligible under Criterion A for its associations with the education of women in Virginia in the early-twentieth century and its association with normal schools in Virginia (Neville 1987). It is also considered significant under Criterion C for exemplifying collegiate architectural design work and campus planning. One resource contributing to the Mary Washington College Historic District (111-0001) is Brompton (111-0008), listed in the NRHP and VLR under Criteria A and C. The building is representative of the Richardsonian Romanesque architectural style and is associated with the broad patterns of history of the City of Fredericksburg and Mary Washington College.

Two resources were determined to be not individually eligible for listing on the NRHP. Forty-five previously recorded resources have not been formally evaluated for their NRHP eligibility, which includes the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009), and 11 of the 1,040 previously recorded resources are known to be no longer extant.

Among the 1,040 resources within the 0.5 miles of the project corridor in the DJFB segment, 453 previously recorded resources are associated with the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). One of these resources is the James Monroe Law Office (111-0066), a Federal-style building listed in the NRHP and the VLR and is designated a NHL under Criterion A for its contributions to the broad patterns of history within Fredericksburg, Criterion B for its association with James Monroe, and Criterion C for being an exceptional example of the Federal architectural style. Six other resources that contribute to the integrity of the Fredericksburg Historic District are listed in the NRHP and the VLR. This includes the Farmer's Bank of Fredericksburg/National Bank of Fredericksburg (111-0021), the Fredericksburg Town Hall and Market Square (111-0057), and Sentry Box (111-0095) which are both individually listed in the NRHP under Criterion C for being excellent examples of the Federal architectural style. The Chimneys (111-0021) building is listed under Criterion C for being an exemplary example of Georgian architectural style. The Presbyterian Church of Fredericksburg (111-0034) is listed in the NRHP under Criteria A and C for contributing to the broad pattern of history within Fredericksburg and being a fine example of the Early Classical Revival architectural style.

A previously recorded resource listed in the VLR but not on the NRHP, Stevenson-Doggett House (111-0087), is an exemplary example of the Federal architectural style within Fredericksburg and is also considered a contributing resource to the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). Two resources (111-0062 and 111-0104) do not possess sufficient significance to be considered individually eligible for the NRHP, but contribute to the architectural integrity of the Fredericksburg Historic District. Of the 453 previously recorded resources associated with the Fredericksburg Historic District, 444 of these properties were not individually evaluated for their NRHP eligibility.

Included in the 1,040 previously recorded resources are 516 resources are contributing the integrity of the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009). Three of these resources are listed in the NRHP and VLR. Rowe House/John Lewis House (111-0107) is a Federal-style building that is listed in the NRHP and VLR under Criterion C. Federal Hill (111-0030) is another Federal-style building that is listed in the NRHP and VLR under Criteria A and C. The Matthew Fontaine Maury School (111-0009-0014) is listed under Criterion A for being the first purpose-built public high school within the City of Fredericksburg and it also contributes to the broad patterns of African American history for Fredericksburg. The school also meets the requirements for listing under Criterion C as a classic example of early-twentieth-century public school architecture and represents a prominent architect in Fredericksburg (Green and Sadler 2006). The remaining 513 properties associated with the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension were previously surveyed but not formally, individually evaluated for their NRHP eligibility.

Chatham (089-0011), an eighteenth-century, Georgian-style plantation currently in use by the National Park Service and listed in the NRHP and VLR, is a contributing resource to the Falmouth Historic District (089-0067) and the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Battlefields National Military Park (111-0147). Although individually eligible for the NRHP, the Montfort Academy/Richardson House (111-5266) is considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Battlefields National Military Park (111-0147).

The architectural investigation of the Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg (DJFB) segment of the Washington, D.C. to Richmond Southeast High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) project involved a field survey of all above-ground resources over 50 years in age within the Project’s architectural area of potential effects (APE). Both previously recorded properties and newly recorded resources were included as part of the current evaluation to achieve cultural resource compliance. The current survey identified 146 previously recorded resources and 125 newly recorded resources, for a total of 271 surveyed resources.

5.1 PREVIOUSLY RECORDED RESOURCES

This survey identified 146 previously recorded buildings, objects, and districts within the architectural APE (Table 5-1, Figures 5-1 through 5-11). Any previously recorded structures within the APE will be included in a subsequent report. Of those 146 resources, four have been previously listed in or determined potentially eligible/eligible for the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP). The remaining 142 of the previously recorded resources had not been formally evaluated for the NRHP.

Table 5-1 lists these 146 resources, along with Dovetail’s eligibility determination. Cells highlighted in red denote resources that should retain their previous eligibility determination (potentially eligible or eligible for, or listed in, the NRHP), while cells highlighted in blue denote resources recommended potentially eligible as a part of the current survey.

5.1.1 Previously Recommended Potentially Eligible/Eligible for, or Listed in, the NRHP

Four of the 146 previously recorded resources included in this survey have received a formal NRHP eligibility evaluation from Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) staff. This includes two battlefields (088-5181 and 111-5296), one site (111-0146), and one historic district (111-0132). A brief description of each is listed below.

The Salem Church Battlefield (088-5181) is the location of Confederate brigade attacks on Union soldiers on May 4, 1863. Although the resource is surrounded by large-scale commercial and residential development, major roads, and expansive parking lots, according information on file at DHR, original elements from this Civil War battle survive, such as Salem Church and earthworks. On March 22, 2000, the Salem Church Battlefield received a Federal Determination of Eligibility. Despite recent development, the resource has not notably changed since it was determined eligible for the NRHP in 2000. As such, it is recommended that the Salem Church Battlefield remain eligible for the NRHP.

The Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132) is a 200-acre area that comprises the city's downtown commercial area, adjacent industrial area, and some of the surrounding residential blocks. This part of Fredericksburg boasts a wide variety of infrastructure that ranges in date from the early eighteenth century throughout the late twentieth century. The Fredericksburg Historic District was listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register (VLR) on March 2, 1971 and the NRHP on September 22 of the same year; it currently has a period of significance of 1727 to

RESULTS

1958. It is recommended that the Fredericksburg Historic District remains eligible for, and listed in, the NRHP.

The Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory site (111-0145) dates to circa 1775 and, according to the Historic Marker located at the site, it was the first gunnery in America. This resource was listed in the VLR on April 19, 1977 and the NRHP on November 14, 1978. The areas of significance for Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory eligibility for the NRHP has not drastically changed since it was listed. As such, the DC2RVA Project Team recommends that the Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory remains eligible for and listed in the NRHP. In addition, it is also recommended that the Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory should be considered a contributing resource to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension.

The Battle of Fredericksburg II (111-5296) is a 12,694.2-acre battlefield associated with a Civil War battle of the same name, which took place on May 3, 1863 (DHR 2015). Despite expansive residential, commercial, and industrial development around the battlefield and the Fredericksburg, the battlefield continues to retain a high level of integrity and the American Battlefield Protection Program (ABPP) it was determined potentially eligible for the NRHP on January 24, 2007. It is recommended that the Battle of Fredericksburg II remains potentially eligible for the NRHP and that the Battle of Fredericksburg II should continue to be associated with the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Battlefields National Military Park.

5.1.2 Previously Not Evaluated

Of the 146 previously recorded resources, 142 had not formally received an eligibility determination from DHR at the time of the survey. Of those, Dovetail recommended that seven should be considered potentially eligible for the NRHP. A brief description of each is listed below. The remaining 135 resources are recommended not eligible for the NRHP; these resources are summarized at the end of this section.

5.1.2.1 Previously Not Evaluated Resources Recommended Potentially Eligible

The Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) is a large historic district that includes a wide variety of resources immediately surrounding the city's downtown core. The current boundaries extend to the Route 3/Route 2 intersection to the southeast, the Fredericksburg National Cemetery to the southwest, Sunken Road to the west, the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132) boundaries to the east, and a jagged boundary to north that terminates at the location where the Fredericksburg Canal crosses under Princess Anne and Caroline streets. Although a majority of the buildings appear to be single-family dwellings constructed in the early- to mid-twentieth century, also included in this district are commercial and religious buildings, cemeteries, warehouses, service stations. Many of the buildings within the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension appear to retain their historic character with relatively little infill; the resource has a moderate to high level of historic integrity. For these reasons, the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. It has no known association with any significant event or person and therefore is recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A or B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D.

Pulliam's Service Station (111-0009-0795) at 411 Lafayette Boulevard is a one-story filling station in downtown Fredericksburg. It was constructed around 1935 in the Spanish Revival style. This building retains many of its original historic elements, including terra-cotta roof, metal windows, and exterior restroom building. The building appears to retain a moderate to high level of historic integrity of materials, location, association, design, workmanship, setting, and feeling. In addition, it is one of only a few surviving downtown service stations. For these reasons, this resource is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. It has no known association with any significant event or person and therefore is recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A or B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D. In addition, Pulliam's Service Station is located within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009). It was constructed during the district's period of significance and is representative of architectural and historic trends in the area. For this reason, the resource should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension.

Dixon House at 401-403 Sophia Street (111-0023) is a two-story, four-bay dwelling. Composed of two distinct sections, it appears that the southern half is the original core while the northern half is a later addition. This circa-1843 house appears to retain a moderate level of historic integrity of materials, location, association, design, workmanship, and feeling. In addition, it is one of the few, if not the only, surviving antebellum dwelling on Sophia's river side—a historic landscape that is almost entirely lost. For this reason, it is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. It has no known association with any significant event or person and therefore is recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criterion B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D. In addition, the Dixon House should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District. The Dixon House is located within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). It was constructed during the district's period of significance and is representative of architectural and historic trends in the area. For this reason, the resource should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

The Purina Tower (111-0132-0020) at 401 Charles Street is a one-and-one-half story commercial building with a tall grain elevator at the northwest corner. This complex was constructed in 1916, and the tower has become an important landscape landmark within the community. The building appears to retain a moderate to high level of historic integrity of materials, location, design, workmanship, setting, and feeling. For these reasons, this resource is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. It has no known association with any significant event or person and therefore is recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A and B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D. Purina Tower is located within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). It was constructed during the district's period of significance and is representative of architectural and historic trends in the area. For this reason, the resource should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

The Duplex at 314-316 Frederick Street (111-0132-0522) is a two-story, four-bay dwelling constructed in 1851. The building appears to retain a moderate to high level of historic integrity of materials, location, association, design, workmanship, setting, and feeling. In addition, it is believed that this building was used by George Aler as a slave jail (Hennessy 2010). For these reasons, this resource is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A and C. It has no known association with any significant person and therefore is recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criterion B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D. In addition, this resource is located within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). It was constructed during the district's period of significance and is representative of architectural and historic trends in the area. For this reason, the resource should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

The Fredericksburg Train Station (111-0132-0704) at 200 Lafayette Street is a two-story, five-bay building constructed in 1910 in the Colonial Revival style. It is representative of a form and style that is uncommon in the neighborhood and throughout Fredericksburg as a whole. Architectural elements such as the pediment, enriched cornice, Palladian window, and fan and compass lights embody the distinct characteristics of the style. Furthermore, it was constructed by the notable Fredericksburg builder E.G. “Peck” Heflin. For these reasons, it is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. Because the train station played a significant role in Fredericksburg’s transportation and railroad history, this resource is recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion A. It has no known association with any significant person, and is, therefore, recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criterion B. As an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D. In addition, this resource is located within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). It was constructed during the district’s period of significance and is representative of architectural and historic trends in the area. For this reason, the resource should be considered a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

The Battle of Fredericksburg I (111-5295) is the location of a Civil War battle that occurred between December 11 and December 15, 1862. Union Major General Ambrose Burnside and his troops battled General Robert E. Lee’s Confederate men in and surrounding the City of Fredericksburg, resulting in a Confederate victory. The battlefield continues to retain a high level of integrity. It recommended that the Battle of Fredericksburg I is potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criterion A for its association with a notable Civil War Battle. As a whole, the battlefield is recommended not eligible under Criteria B and C and, as an architectural resource, this property was not evaluated under Criterion D.

5.1.2.2 Previously Not Evaluated Resources Recommended Not Eligible

Of the 142 previously recorded resources that had not formally received an eligibility determination from DHR, the remaining 135 are recommended not eligible. A majority of the resources (n=88) are single- and multi-family dwellings that range in date from 1761 (The Dixon House/John Paul Jones House, 111-0046) to 2000 (Single Dwelling, 109 Lafayette Boulevard, 111-0132-0703). These houses are representative of architectural trends that were popular throughout the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries, including the Greek Revival, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival styles. In addition, many dwellings lack high-style attributes; instead, they were constructed in a vernacular form that is common throughout Fredericksburg. Most of these buildings are one- to two-and-a-half story dwellings with frame or masonry structural systems.

Eighteen of the 135 resources are commercial buildings. Two of these, Nader's Grocery (111-0132-0443) and the commercial building at 404 Princess Anne Street (111-0132-0142), date the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Both of these are brick buildings; 404 Princess Anne Street appears to retain its original massing, whereas Nader's Grocery has undergone a lot of twentieth-century modifications. A majority (n=14) of the 18 stores dates to the early- and mid-twentieth century. The remaining two (111-0009-0789 and 111-0009-0793) were constructed in the twenty-first century. Many of the surveyed commercial buildings are clustered around Lafayette Boulevard, Princess Anne Street, and Wolfe Street.

Also within the APE are five previously recorded industrial buildings including four warehouses and one factory. Two of the warehouses are multi-story, brick stores that were historically owned and operated by the Janney-Marshall company as a wholesale grocery (111-0132-0298) and a separate coffee-roasting outfit (111-0132-0520). Two have been converted and are currently used for offices and storage. The RF&P Freight Warehouse (111-0009-0016) is now used as a resident's center for the Cobblestone neighborhood, and the Factory at 200 Prince Edward Street (111-0132-0719) was heavily modified and, following several additions, it was converted into a church.

As a whole, these 135 resources have no outstanding architectural elements and are not the works of a master. Furthermore, many have undergone alterations such as siding and window replacement and the construction of additions. For these reasons, these 135 resources are recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criterion C. They have no known association with a significant event or person and are not associated with any broad patterns in history. Therefore, they are recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A and B. As architectural resources, these properties are not eligible under Criterion D, but they were not evaluated under that criterion as archaeological resources.

Many of the 135 previously recorded resources that are recommended not individually eligible for the NRHP are located within the boundaries of one of two historic districts. It is recommended that 88 resources should be considered contributing elements to the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132) and 24 resources should be considered contributing to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009).

5.2 NEWLY RECORDED RESOURCES

5.2.1 Newly Recorded Resources Recommended Potentially Eligible

There are no newly recorded resources within the architectural area of potential effects (APE) of the DJFB segment that are recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP.

5.2.2 Newly Recorded Resources Recommended Not Eligible

Of the 271 above-ground resources recorded in the architectural APE of the DJFB segment during the current project, the DC2RVA Project Team documented 125 newly recorded resources (Table 5-2; Figures 5-12 through 5-17). A high percentage (n=118) are houses, 117 of which are single family and one of which is a duplex. A majority of the dwellings (n=61) were constructed during the first half of the twentieth century and 57 date in the 15-year span between 1950 and 1965. Some of these buildings are examples of styles and forms that were popular during the first three quarters of the twentieth century, such as the Colonial Revival, Craftsman, Ranch, and Minimal Traditional styles and bungalow and cape cod forms; however, on a whole, they represent a building type that is vernacular throughout the region. One circa-1920 residence (089-5494) was converted into a church office for the Emmanuel A.M.E. Church in Stafford County.

One newly recorded resource is the Mayfield Historic District (111-5381). This neighborhood was platted around 1920 and slowly developed over the next nine decades. It is made up of single- and multi-family dwellings, religious facilities, and commercial buildings. On a whole, the historic integrity of the district has been negatively impacted as a result of additions, deterioration, and modern infill.

The remaining six resources are commercial buildings and auto repair shops. They range in date from 1947 to 1960 and are, for the most part, one-story resources with masonry structural systems. All of these resources exemplify common styles and forms found among commercial buildings constructed during that time period.

These 125 newly recorded resources have no outstanding architectural merit and are not known to be the work of a master. For these reasons, they are recommended not eligible for individual listing on the NRHP under Criterion C. They have no known association with a significant event or person and are not associated with any broad patterns in history. Therefore, they are recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A and B. As architectural resources, these properties were not evaluated under Criterion D. In sum, these 125 newly recorded resources are recommended not eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A-C.

SUMMARY AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The DC2RVA Project Team conducted a reconnaissance-level architectural survey of the DJFB segment of the Washington, D.C. to Richmond Southeast High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) corridor. The DC2RVA project is being completed under the auspice of the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) in conjunction with the Virginia Department of Rail and Public Transportation (DRPT). Because of FRA's involvement, the undertaking is required to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, as amended. The Project is being completed as Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) File Review #2014-0666.

In total, the DC2RVA Project Team surveyed 271 historic architectural resources within the architectural APE within the DJFB segment. Of these, the majority (n=259) do not have any known association with a known historic trend or specific event or a notable person (Table 6-1). Furthermore, they have no outstanding architectural merit and are not known to be the work of a master. As such it is recommended that 259 of the 271 resources surveyed during the current survey are not eligible for individual listing on the NHRP.

Four resources were previously determined potentially eligible/eligible for, or listed in, the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP), including two battlefields (Salem Church Battlefield, 088-5181 and Battle of Fredericksburg II, 111-5296), one historic district (Fredericksburg Historic District, 111-0132), and one site (Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory, 111-0145). Because these four resources have not been greatly altered and continue to possess the same levels of integrity that made them eligible for the NRHP, the DC2RVA Project Team recommends that they should retain their previous eligibility status. In addition, as a result of the current survey, seven resources (Fredericksburg Historic District Extension, 111-0009; Pulliam's Service Station, 111-0009-0795; Dixon's House, 111-0023; Purina Tower, 111-0132-0020; Duplex House, 314-316 Frederick Street, 111-0132-0522; Fredericksburg Train Station, 111-0132-0704; and the Battle of Fredericksburg I, 111-5295) are recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP.

Despite their individual eligibility recommendation, many resources within the DJFB segment are located within the boundaries of one of two historic districts: the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) and the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). As a result, the DC2RVA Project Team recommends that 25 are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension and 92 properties are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District.

Table 6-1 summarizes identified resources in the DJFB segment, along with Dovetail's eligibility determination. Cells highlighted in red denote resources that should retain their previous eligibility determination (potentially eligible or eligible for, or listed in, the NRHP), while cells

RE: Resource Eligibility/ Segment 7 (Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg)
Southeast High Speed Rail Project, Washington, D.C. to Richmond Segment
DHR #2014-0666

Dear Marc,

The Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) and the Virginia Department of Rail and Public Transportation (DRPT) are continuing environmental studies associated with the Tier II Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for the Washington, D.C. to Richmond segment of the Southeast High Speed Rail (DC2RVA) corridor (Project). The limits of the Project extend from Control Point RO (MP CFP-110) in Arlington south to the CSX Transportation ("CSXT") A-Line/CSXT-S-Line junction at MP A-11 in Centralia, Virginia (Chesterfield County), a distance of approximately 123 miles.

This project is receiving federal funding through the FRA, requires permits issued by federal agencies such as the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and will traverse federal land including parcels owned by the U.S. Marine Corps and the National Park Service, among others. Due to the involvement of these and several other federal entities, the undertaking requires compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act (NHPA), as amended. The FRA sent your office a project Initiation letter on December 11, 2014, formally commencing the Section 106 process, and the project's Area of Potential Effects (APE) was approved by the State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) on February 2, 2015, as required by 36 CFR 800.4(a)(1).

We are writing today to coordinate architectural identification studies within Segment 7/Dahlgren Junction to Fredericksburg (DJFB) of the larger Project initiative. Segment 7/DJFB includes the span between the CSX right of way and the Dahlgren Spur on the north (just north of the Rappahannock River) and just south of Howison Street in the City of Fredericksburg on the south. Enclosed please find two hard copies and one electronic copy of the report entitled Architectural Reconnaissance Survey for the Washington, D.C. to Richmond, Virginia High Speed Rail Project, Dahlgren to Fredericksburg (DJFB) Segment, City of Fredericksburg and Stafford County. The report was authored by Heather Dollins Staton and Adriana Lesiuk with Dovetail Cultural Resource Group (Dovetail), a member of the DC2RVA Project Team. The report meets all standards set forth in both the Secretary of Interior's Standards and Guidelines (1983) and the DHR's Guidelines for Preparing Identification and Evaluation Reports (2011).

In total, the DC2RVA Project Team surveyed 271 historic architectural resources within the architectural APE within the Segment 7/DJFB. Of these, the majority (n=259) do not have any known association with a known historic trend or specific event or a notable person. Furthermore, they have no outstanding architectural merit and are not known to be the work of a master. As such it is recommended that 259 of the 271 resources surveyed during the current survey are not eligible for individual listing on the NHRP. (A table is attached showing the resource numbers, names and addresses of these resources.)

Four resources were previously determined potentially eligible/eligible for, or listed in, the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP), including two battlefields (Salem Church Battlefield, 088-5181 and Battle of Fredericksburg II, 111-5296), one historic district (Fredericksburg Historic District, 111-0132), and one site (Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory, 111-0145). Because these four resources have not been greatly altered and continue to possess the same levels of integrity that made them eligible for the NRHP, it is recommended that they should retain their previous eligibility status. In addition, as a result of the current survey, seven resources (Fredericksburg Historic District Extension, 111-0009; Pulliam's Service Station, 111-0009-0795; Dixon's House, 111-0023; Purina Tower, 111-0132-0020; Duplex House, 314-316 Frederick Street, 111-0132-0522; Fredericksburg Train Station, 111-0132-0704; and the Battle of Fredericksburg I, 111-5295) are recommended potentially eligible for the NRHP.

Despite their individual eligibility recommendation, many resources within the DJFB segment are located within the boundaries of one of two historic districts: the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) and the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). As a result, it is recommended that 25 recorded properties are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension and 92 properties are contributing resources to the Fredericksburg Historic District. The attached table contains specific data on these recommendations.

We invite your agency to concur with these recommendations within 30 days of receipt of this letter. If you have questions about historic property studies for this project, please do not hesitate to contact me at (540) 899-9170 or via email at kbarile@dovetailcrg.com.

Sincerely,

Kerri S. Barile, Ph.D.

The Virginia SHPO concurs that the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132) should remain listed in the NRHP and the Fredericksburg Gun Manufactory (111-0145) should remain listed in the NRHP and is a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132). They further concur that the Salem Church Battlefield (088-5181) should remain eligible for the NRHP and the Battle of Fredericksburg II battlefield (111-5296) should remain potentially eligible for the NRHP and is associated with the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Battlefields National Military Park (111-0147).

The SHPO also concurs that Battle of Fredericksburg I (111-5295) and the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009) are potentially eligible for the NRHP; the Dixon House at 401–403 Sophia Street (111-0023), the Purina Tower (111-0132-0020), the House at 314–316 Frederick Street (111-0132-0522), and the Fredericksburg Train Station at 200 Lafayette Boulevard (111-0132-0704) are potentially eligible for the NRHP as individual resources and are also contributing elements to the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132); and Pulliam’s Service Station at 411 Lafayette Boulevard (111-0009-0795) is potentially eligible for the NRHP as an individual resource and is also a contributing element to the Fredericksburg Historic District Extension (111-0009).

The SHPO further concurs that the following resources are not individually eligible but contribute to the Fredericksburg Historic District (111-0132):

- 111-0046 Dixon House/John Paul Jones House, 501 Caroline Street
- 111-0049 Kimmin House, 309 Caroline Street
- 111-0068 Dr. Charles Mortimer House, 303 Caroline Street
